1. His original white limestone marker is now fragmented into several pieces, part of which were used as footings for the present (ca. 1900) brown granite marker. Another large portion of the original stone is discarded in the fence row brush pile to the south.
2. Only the lowest portion of this marker remains. The rest, now missing, was still intact in 1938.
3. This marker has been broken into several pieces, the lowest of which is still embedded in the ground. One piece was located laying atop another grave and a third piece was found in the fence row brush pile to the south.
4. This row is not in alignment with the other rows.
5. The top-most portion of this stone, including the given name, has been broken off and lost. The stone itself is broken at the base and was found in row #2.
6. Amazingly, even the footstone of this grave remains intact.
7. Stone is extremely weathered but footstone remains intact.
8. Among the brush and debris piled along the fence row to the south is one unidentified stone whose original "owner" died July 17, 1862. The stone, 22½ inches wide and 2 inches thick, is engraved with the following verse:

"What glorious peace I now enjoy
 Free from pain and earths alloy
 My happy spirit soars away
 To live with God in heavenly day."
